Project Title: Brigandines, a forgotten middle child./Bogu, armor for the modern warrior.

I would like to build this site out as a hybrid multipage informational site akin that of Wikipedia or Britannica or any of the other “wiki” sites. I would like to utilize either side scrolling navigation or header navigation to differentiate categories but have each category have a dedicated page with vertical scrolling and following side navigation. In essence, it would function like a mini wiki in its own for the object in question. However, I can’t help but feel that this might be a fundamentally flawed design approach and sticking to a more traditional multipage layout without the hybridization of the wiki aspects may be a more appropriate choice. Images are plentiful so finding resources won’t be an issue.

- Home page
 - Introduces the items and gives a brief overview of both the site’s contents. Gives users a quick overview that hooks interest or allows them to decide that this isn’t interesting to them personally.
- History of and contemporary uses.
 - Universal nature of the brigandine.
 - Evolution out of coat of plates
 - Various types and ranges in quality
- Modern iterations and usage
 - Variations
 - Practicality
 - Cost then vs now
 - Dragon skin
 - Applications in modern body armor
- Common misconceptions
 - Efficacy of armor in general

- “Studded leather”
 - “Brigand” origins
- Sources
 - (likely to use a few outside of Wikipedia. Especially for image credits)
